Dear Councilman Carlos Bezerra, Júnior,

I would like to invite you to attend Pentecost 2007: Taking the Vision to the Streets from June 2 through June 7, in Washington D.C.

We have learned of your work with the poor and your fight against injustice in your country of Brazil. As the director of Instituto Agente, a Christian non-profit organization which organizes, gives support and offers help to initiate social works such as the Permanent Christian Social Forum, Christian Social Organizations, and Speak Up Project, your participation in our event would be most helpful. We also know of your commitment to young people as the one who thought of Usine 21- Youth, Ideas and Social Transformations, one of the main events to the Christian Youth to discuss their role in society, and the application of the Gospel in their everyday life.

For over ten years, Sojourners/Call to Renewal (www.sojo.net) has been convening a major conference of church leaders, service providers, anti-poverty advocates, and "emerging leaders" (ages 30 and under) from across the country to mobilize the church in the fight against poverty.

Pentecost marks the time in the church calendar when the Spirit came upon a frightened band of disciples hiding together in an upper room and sent them into the streets to boldly proclaim the gospel. The miracle of that day was that each person in the crowd heard the good news spoken by the apostles in his or her own tongue. That good news encompassed a promise of social justice and created a community with a shared economy that included the poor. In our day, churches from across the theological and political spectrum are now calling for a gospel that brings "good news to the poor"—just as Jesus preached it in Luke 4:18.

At Sojourners/Call to Renewal, we take this call as the opportunity to bring together hundreds and thousands of faith-inspired people who are seeking God's justice now and to provide them with the tools and the opportunity to both serve the poor and give voice to the voiceless in the halls of power. All God's people—Evangelicals, mainline Protestants, Catholics, Anabaptists, Black, Asian, and Hispanic churches—are being moved by this call for justice and are forming partnerships together. In politics, the conversation about moral values in America has been widening and deepening and now extends to how we treat the poor. This year's conference will be an important and unique event as it captures this excitement with a wide variety of newfound partners and allies.

Our goal at Pentecost 2007: Taking the Vision to the Streets is to move boldly against poverty by calling together these new alliances and seizing new opportunities for the implementation of a broadly supported initiative: the "Covenant for a New America." The covenant is an anti-poverty platform and vision that calls our elected leaders and political candidates to enact solutions that transcend ideology—that stress both personal and social responsibility and insist that overcoming poverty must become a non-partisan issue and a bi-partisan cause (a copy of the covenant is enclosed with this letter).

While attending Pentecost 2007, you will be invited to a Sunday night revival with national religious leaders joining nationally-known, Rev. Jim Wallis in an altar call for justice; an Organizing Institute that will offer in-depth, hands-on training on moving poverty onto the political agenda and other issue-related workshops; and a Capitol Hill reception with key members of the House and Senate. Finally, we will also be hosting a nationally televised public forum where church leaders will ask the leading Democratic Presidential candidates, Sen. Hillary Clinton, Sen. Barack Obama, and Sen. John Edwards about their plans for serious domestic and global poverty reduction.

I sincerely believe that Pentecost 2007 could be the beginning of a broad faith community effort to lift up those whom Jesus called "the least of these" to the attention of the nation during this critical election year. And I believe we can work to bring together Christians who have often found more that divides them than unites them.

I hope you are able to attend.

Blessings,
